

Exploring Irrevocable Life Insurance Trusts (ILITs)

Life insurance can be a useful, tax-efficient tool for ensuring the transfer of wealth and assets across generations – but finding the right structure to support your estate planning goals is crucial. As you begin your estate planning process, an irrevocable life insurance trust (ILIT) can provide a host of tax and non-tax advantages, as well as greater control over a life insurance policy that a last will and testament may not provide.

What is an ILIT?

An ILIT is a trust created to own and control one or more life insurance policies, typically insuring the life of the person or persons creating the ILIT, known as the grantor. For premium payments, the grantor typically funds the trust by gifting cash or other assets. If the trust is structured and managed properly, the life insurance death benefit received by the ILIT will not be subject to income tax or estate tax upon the death of the insured(s).

Benefits of ILITs

Liquidity for estate taxes and other expenses

ILITs provide liquidity, outside of the grantor's taxable estate, for the payment of estate taxes, debts, and expenses of administration. While the federal estate tax exemption for individuals in 2022 is $12,060,000 (IRS)¹, this exemption will be reduced to $5M (indexed for inflation) in 2026 under current law. In addition, several states impose a state level estate tax or inheritance tax.

Leverage annual gift tax exclusion

In 2022, individuals have the ability to give an annual gift of $16,000 to another individual each year without incurring any gift taxes (IRS)³. By creating an appropriately structured ILIT, grantors can make annual exclusion gifts of $16,000 to each beneficiary of the trust.

Preserve an inheritance

The generation-skipping transfer (GST) tax applies a 40% tax on the transfer (during life or at death) of property valued at more than $12,060,000 to individuals who are more than one generation removed from the donor (IRS)². An ILIT can also be structured to be GST-exempt for future generations.

Protect your assets

An ILIT provides protection from the creditors of the grantor or beneficiaries, as well as protection from ex-spouses or in a bankruptcy situation. The trustee of an ILIT can also have the discretionary power to control how insurance proceeds are paid out, which can help a beneficiary avoid irresponsible spending.
